5 KEY TIPS TO CHECKING OFF YOUR LIST

Gain peace of mind by completing unfinished home tasks in 2025

As 2025 dawns, many are expressing weariness with new year's resolutions. However, the new year can present an opportunity to check off some unfinished home tasks from the past year(s) that might feel like they are hanging over your head. And even though balancing busy schedules and tight budgets while tackling these tasks can feel overwhelming, with the right strategies, you can make steady progress towards completion.

Money-Savers

A tight budget doesn't mean you can't make improvements. Look for cost-effective solutions, such as DIY repairs, upcycling materials, or purchasing supplies during sales. Apps and websites like Facebook Marketplace often offer second-hand items at a fraction of retail prices.

Seek Help

Sometimes a project requires expertise or more hands. Consider enlisting family or friends for help. For complex jobs, barter skills with neighbours or hire professionals during promotional periods for discounts.

Flexibility is Key

If a lack of funds stalls one project, shift focus to tasks requiring less money. If finding time is a challenge, make use of small pockets of time. Dedicate 15-30 minutes daily to specific tasks, such as organizing drawers or patching up walls. Weekend mornings or evenings can be reserved for more involved projects. Flexibility ensures consistent progress without frustration.

First Prioritize

Start by listing all your unfinished tasks and categorizing them by importance. Focus on projects that improve safety, such as fixing electrical issues, or those that increase home value, like painting walls. Prioritizing tasks ensures you're tackling the most impactful projects first.

Bite-size Goals

Break larger tasks into smaller, manageable steps. For instance, instead of committing to renovating an entire room, start by decluttering, then focus on painting, and gradually move to decor. Setting achievable milestones keeps you motivated and ensures consistent progress.
